Top Eight Things Your DJ Does Besides Plays Music!

1. Helps enforce the day-of timeline

Your wedding DJ is responsible for executing and enforcing the timeline during your reception, making announcements to ensure that events occur on time and if there are any hold-ups, adjusting accordingly.

2. Provides quality sound equipment

Having high-quality, working sound equipment is an absolute must—and your wedding DJ will have that all covered. Without microphones, speakers, and the like, your guests won't be able to hear your first introduction as a married couple, the lyrics to your first-dance song, your best man's toast, the announcement that dinner is being served, or that last dance is being played.

3. Makes sure all equipment is working

There are few things more annoying during a wedding reception than music that's too loud, too soft, or muffled, or worst-case scenario, dead air due to malfunctioning equipment. Not only do experienced wedding DJs utilize top-of-the-line, state-of-the-art equipment, they also do sound checks at your venue well before the reception begins to ensure that everything is working properly so there won't be any awkward silences.

4. Sets the mood

A wedding DJ sets the tone for your reception by playing the right songs at the right times and reading the crowd accordingly. If you want your party to be a total rager, they'll know the right tunes to put guests in a dancing mood. Alternatively, if your goal is a reception with an old-school romantic feel, your DJ will know how to create that vintage vibe.

5. Helps you choose songs

Your wedding DJ can be a great source of advice if you're struggling to pick songs for any of your special dances. An experienced DJ has seen first-hand which songs work and which don't and is up-to-date on the newest tunes.

6. Serves as emcee

Emcee may be the most important role your wedding DJ will play. Think of your DJ as the host, cruise director, and point person for the evening, making announcements and ensuring that your guests are aware of what's going on and what's next. Having your wedding DJ serve as emcee is far more authoritative and professional than you trying to shout "Time for dinner!" over the blasting music.

7. Can create mashups and song cuts

Worried your first dance song might be a bit too long? Your wedding DJ has got you covered! Want to start your father-daughter dance with a slow song and then surprise your guests by cutting into a Michael Jackson favorite? A DJ can create a custom remix just for you.

8. Covers up any hiccups

Things may go wrong on your wedding day, but fortunately, wedding DJs are pros at getting things back on track. Let's say dinner is running slightly behind schedule. Your DJ can play an extra few songs so that guests are too busy dancing to care that the food's not ready. Your guests won't notice any potentially-awkward mishaps when you've got a pro wedding DJ at the helm.
